A GOOD SPEECH.

Delivered by Rev. Ashford Hall, at Tunneton, Preston Co., W. Va., on the Fourth of July, and Published at the Request of the Audience.

We are gathered here to commemorate by suitable demonstrations of gratitude and joy the great event which has been separate and equal station among the powers of the earth. We hail the return of the anniversary of American independence—the birth-day of American freedom. The citizens of this land which we assemble give additional interest to the occasion. The struggle for independence has a significance which never had before. We are brought, by our own history, to a deeper sympathy with those who established it. Fresh from the field of conflict where we have fought for the maintenance of the glorious boon for which our fathers bled, we called for the award of the medal which they deserved. We can appreciate now as never before, the patrimony bequeathed to us by our fathers. We set a higher estimate upon our inheritance than we could have done had we never been called to resist the efforts of traitors to wrest it from us. Our institutions are doubly dear now that we have paid for them a second time in suffering and blood.

Wrong when they dissolved all political connection between themselves and the State of Great Britain, and declared the United Colonies free and independent States? Were they in error when they threw off "all allegiance, fidelity, British crown," and declared they had a right to govern themselves, and were capable of doing so? The events of eighty-nine years prove they were right in their principles and in their conduct, and if they had failed in their efforts to establish their independence, that declaration would have been, before the world, a sufficient vindication of their course.

It is not only a rebellion against our Government, but a rebellion against the opinions of mankind, to file such a list of grievances as numerous and flagrant as those contained in that declaration, which might have been today a separate and independent nation.
But all the respect they had for themselves, the opinions of others, and all other considerations, were not sufficient to induce them to declare the causes which impelled them to separate from us. For the best reason in the world.
They had no grievances to record—no wrongs to redress. They had no decent pretext for their crime. While our fathers deserved success, they as richly deserved failure.

If the events of history will serve to interpret the purposes of Providence, we may safely affirm that he designed this land to be the abode of Liberty. For ages he kept it concealed from the eye of tyrants, till it could be perceived by men of sufficient intelligence and virtue for self-government, and cut it off by occasions on either side, that it might be secure against the corrupting influences of the despotism of the old world.

There are many remarkable Providences connected with the discovery and settlement of our country. The character of the first settlers. Their privations, their trials and their triumphs. Early in the history of the colonies commenced the "long train of abuses and usurpations" which evinced a design, on the part of Great Britain, to bring them under an absolute despotism. The tyrannical and oppressive and insult till patience ceased to be a virtue, and then sought to achieve by force, what milder means had failed to accomplish. When they first took up arms they intended only to redress their wrongs. But Providence guided them to other and happier results than they intended. They soon came to the turning point in their destiny. They must make a choice—they must go back to a worse condition, or they must go better. They must be an enslaved people, or they must be a free people. They rose to the grandeur of the crisis, and made the choice, as the result has shown, on the right side.

On the memorable fourth of July, 1776, by their representatives in Congress, they published to the world that immortal Declaration of Independence.
A war of seven years' duration followed —the goal was at last reached. The best government ever given to man was established. Our country was destined to be great. Her geographical position, her vast domain, her varied climate, rich soil, boundless resources, her intelligence and free institutions—all pointed to a glorious destiny. Never before has a nation possessed such elements of greatness. Never before has there been afforded such an opportunity for pre-eminence to the world.

War has brought great changes. As a nation we are not what we were when it began; we never shall be again. Are these changes for the better or for the worse? We hope for the better. God will make the wrath of man to praise him, and cause good out of evil, and order out of confusion.

As to the results of the conflict it may be too soon to speak with confidence.
But something may be set down as facts, and if the incidents of the past throw light on the future, and "coming events cast their shadow before," we may predict other things with some degree of certainty.

The war will settle many questions concerning the character and designs of our government. The constitution will be better understood. The relative rights and power of the National and State governments will be clearly defined. The supremacy of the former is forever settled and confirmed.

WHEELING, WEST VA., TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 11, 1865.

giving up the contest and emigrating to better hopes. Under his leadership, however, the republican form finally prevailed, so far at least as to be the ruling element in the English government. When the question was settled in England by the triumph of republican principles, the contest was transferred to this continent.

In the year 1620 the May Flower landed on Plymouth Rock a band of Puritans.
Driven by religious persecution from their own land, they sought in a foreign land the liberty of conscience they claimed as their right.

About the same time Jamestown, Va., was settled by a company of "noblemen and merchants," accompanied by a representative settlement. On Plymouth Rock was planted the seed of Liberty —the germ of a higher civilization than the world had ever witnessed—a civilization with which the thought is free, learning fostered, every man a citizen, respected—where "labor is compensated and honored"—where the poor find protection, the oppressed an asylum, science, art, and science and religion a sanctuary.

Jamestown produced a race directly opposite. In the Dutch ships was the seed of a social order radically different and antagonistic. Here one class of society was composed of persons despolizing labor—of idle and dissolute men; the other a menial race, doomed to ignorance and unremunerated toil, with "no rights which a white man is bound to respect." This system bore its natural fruit—ignorance, licentious-ness, oppression, and strife.

Thus, on American soil, is the old contest, made up of the same elements of which it was composed in England.
The great question here, as it was there, is for supremacy—for power.
Plymouth Rock claimed the right to speak. "All men are created equal." They are endowed with certain inalienable rights, among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

cordial welcome home. Musie by the band. Rev. Mr. Higgins addressed the Sabbath-schools.

Then a recess was taken for dinner.
The exercises, presided by their officers, followed their flags to the tables. Each class observed this order, and were at-tively waited on by their respective teachers. This was a magnificent sight.
Both citizens and scholars indulged freely, enjoying the good things which had been so amply provided for them.
Before any part, however, flags had been placed at each table, and blessings asked by the ministers present. You may guess there were some smiles and glances across the several tables, but all partook to satiety; indeed the most unscrupulous epicure would cry "enough." A few moments were now spent in friendly greeting, smiles and social chat. This over, all were summoned to the stand by music from the band. The choir then sang the "Star Spangled Banner," followed by the "Declaration of Independence."

The strike of war, the people read and think as they never have before.
There will be less crime. Political corruption will not prevail as formerly.
The people will ask of their candidates for office, the degree of their civilization, and the school house, and the church, and open Bible, the emblems of his higher intelligence and virtue.
And we shall have, not only in fancy but in fact, a universal Yankee nation, "believing in the doctrines and practicing the principles of the Pilgrim Fathers."

In our great struggle the eyes of the world have been upon us. The lovers of liberty and the foes of freedom have watched the progress of the conflict with intense anxiety. To our hope, the other with fear. When our civil war commenced, the enemies of free institutions were jubilant over what they believed the downfall of our Government. They congratulated each other that "the great American bubble had burst." They told the people that this disruption was in the natural order of things; that republics could not hope to last. When they saw that we were not quite dead, they did what they could to complete the work.
They favored the rebels, subscribed to their " cotton loan," and supplied them with "food and material of war." They were their mortal enemies. When they triumphed over treason. Their sorrow was only equalled by the joy of those who desired our success. The liberal journalists of France declare that "the principle of democracy—of self-government—is judged, and is in the forefront of the pale of discussion."

contest, made up of the same elements
of which it was composed in England.
